

TechCrunch Speculates ETrade Bankruptcy and Paid Posting Networks Stop Using Mass Payment?

I got a shock of my life when I read one of TechCrunch's post written by Duncan Riley speculating that E*Trade might head to the deadpool. Nevertheless, I used E*Trade's system to check out on their stocks and their share prices dipped to an all time low of $3.50 per share. This is the first time in 5 years that their shares dipped this low. I shot to the nearest ATM to withdraw my cash just in case the speculation was right. Take a look at the screenshot below on their share prices:

Today, I checked on their stocks again and luckily it was back up to $5 a share – a HUGE relief for me. I have been using E*Trade for quite sometime now and so far it's an A++ service.

You can follow up the latest news on E*Trade by Google news search or read Duncan Riley's post on Techcrunch here.

On the other hand, I noticed PayPal has been deducting service fees from my incoming transactions for the past 2 days. It seems that according to the author of MyOrganicIncome.com, some of these paid blogging programs such as PayPerPost, Blogsvetise, etc have stop using mass payment – resulting a small percentage of the payment being deducted as a service fees. You can read MyOrganicIncome's post here - there's a guideline on how to downgrade your account from Premier to Personal Account.

However, when I check my PayPal today and none of my incoming payments were deducted anymore. Take a look at the screenshot below:

Click to enlarge
Latest Update:::